The purpose of responsible investment

Responsible investment (RI) means taking environmental, social and governance (ESG) criteria into account when selecting and managing investments, without compromising investors' financial returns.

RI portfolios are designed for investors who are looking for attractive return potential and the opportunity to support companies that are committed to sustainability and social responsibility toward people and communities.

Responsible investment represents 47%
of total assets under management in Canada.¹

The vast majority of studies confirm that, in the medium and long term, there is no compromise on returns with responsible investment.²

Responsible investment allows you to use your investments as leverage for change

In an RI strategy, companies are carefully evaluated by the portfolio manager on their environmental, social and governance (ESG) practices, as well as their financial performance, in order to provide investors with an investment solution that makes a difference for communities and the environment.

ENVIRONMENTAL

- Impact on climate change
- Water management
- Impact on biodiversity

SOCIAL

- Enforce labour standards
- Respect human rights (e.g., child labour)
- Ensure social acceptability (e.g., First Nations)

GOVERNANCE

- Promote board diversity
- Track executive compensation (e.g., incentives and bonuses)
- Recognize shareholder rights
